Chris Gillette

“Regional Group Training helped me kick start my career. It is a friendly and informative environment with modest class sizes to allow for better communication with teachers. The skills that I learnt will be with me throughout my motor mechanic career.”

What is an RTO?

A Registered Training Organisation (RTO) provides quality off-the-job training for Australian Apprentices to assist in the achievement of a nationally recognised qualification.

RGT runs a successful Registered Training Organisation, providing high quality training and assessment services for Australian Apprentices participating in a wide range of nationally recognised qualifications. The Automotive Skills Centre is a sub division of RGT's Registered Training Organisation and provides specialised training programs for the automotive industry.

RGT's Registered Training Organisation aims to provide a centre of excellence in training by promoting and developing an educated, skilled and flexible workforce for our target industries in the ACT. RGT has a dedicated and highly motivated team with industry experience, formal nationally recognised training qualifications, workplace assessor skills, and a strong customer focus.

FAQs

Am I able to receive credit for training I have previously completed?

RGT's Registered Training Organisation believes that no learner should be required to undertake training where they can already demonstrate that they are competent. If you feel you have already achieved any of the competencies in your training program you should inform your training and assessment consultant and complete a Recognition form

How often will a Training and Assessment Consultant visit me?

The arrangements for workplace visits are flexible; however visits are generally conducted once every four weeks

What happens if I change employers?

The qualifications are nationally recognised so you will not have to re-do any units of competency that have already been assessed as competent. You will receive a Statement of Attainment for units already completed and may choose to continue the remainder of the certificate with your new employer at their discretion.
